Start asking,

“What would you like to explore?”

Career guidance does
NOT start in SS3.
It starts when your child is 7... 9... 12.

It starts when you
notice:

- What excites them
 - What frustrates them
 - What they do without being forced
- That is data.*

What Career Education Looks Like

Career Education says:

“Let’s discover your strengths.”

“What problems do you enjoy solving?”

“Let’s explore different industries.”

It is curiosity-driven.
It is exposure-driven.
It is child-centered.

Instead of asking:
“What do you want to be?”

Try asking:

*“What do you enjoy
doing so much that you forget time?”
That answer is a clue.*

It Helps Them Know Themselves When children understand:

- Their strengths
- Their interests
- Their natural abilities

They stop copying others.
They start owning who they are.

Ask your child:
"What do you think this person does?"

Encourage curiosity about how jobs impact daily life.

What Direction Really Means

Direction is not a job title.
Direction is answering:

- ☒ What problems do I enjoy solving?
- ☒ What environment helps me thrive?
- ☒ What skills make me valuable?

Those answers can evolve.

Encourage your child to keep a “skills diary” of what they observe. It sparks ideas for future careers!

Next time your child sets the table or narrates a story, remember...they're secretly training for their future career.

Parents, which daily activity do you think teaches the most career skills?"

Talk About Skills, Not Just Grades Instead of

“get A’s (A+)”

ask:
“What did you learn today?”

Focus on problem-solving,
creativity, and teamwork.
